FACTSHEET NO. 7

The Committee System of the National Assembly

I. Introduction

(a) Overview of Parliamentary Committees

The Constitution¹ empowers Parliament to establish committees to enable it to perform its functions. A committee is a small group of Members appointed and empowered by the House to perform one or more specific tasks. Its membership typically includes all parliamentary political parties. It examines issues in more detail than is possible if the matter were to be considered in the House. They draw their powers from the House and are required to report their findings to the House.

Committees are one of the tools that assist the Assembly in its functions, namely, to legislate including monitoring and reviewing existing legislation; review administration and expenditure; gather information, conducting investigative inquiries, carrying out vetting of nominees to state and public offices, publicizing key issues, among others.2 The practice of delegating duties to committees of is part of the established procedure of most representative parliamentary bodies.3

The Assembly may refer a particular matter to a committee in various situations including the following cases:

- (a) the matter warrants detailed examination,
- (b) there is need for information to be collected, or
- (c) there is need to receive views of members of the public on a matter.

A committee may also initiate consideration of any matter within its mandate on its own volition.

(b) Why Committees?

Committees exist for various reasons among them:

- i. Facilitation of division of labour: The existence of committees offers an opportunity to the House to deal with several matters simultaneously.
- ii. More suitable deliberative forum than the House: By their nature and expertise, committees are able to consider matters in greater detail than the House. Committees can perform functions which a House may not be well placed to perform. Committees may carry out investigations, hear evidence from witnesses, travel for inquiries, seek advice from experts, and deliberate on matters under inquiry before reporting their findings to the House.
- iii. Bipartisan approach: Committee proceedings are more intimate and bipartisan than proceedings in the House. Party politics are often less prominent in a committee than in the House. This approach enables a committee to review contentious matters more effectively, and to assist parliamentary debate by clarifying issues and establishing common ground between members of different parties.
 - iv. Avenue of public communication and participation: Committees are a good avenue of communication between Parliament and the public. They Coffer a platform for the public to participate in law making and policy review by submission or representation of their views.in

II. Establishment of committees

Parliament and its Committees derive their mandate from the Constitution of Kenya, Statutes and Standing Orders. Article 124 of the Constitution provides that:

- 1) Each House of Parliament may establish committees, and shall make Standing Orders for the orderly conduct of its proceedings, including the proceedings of its committees.
- 2) Parliament may establish joint committees consisting of members of both Houses and may jointly regulate the procedure of those committees.

The Constitution, statutes, the Standing Orders and House resolutions, as the case may be, provide for the various types of committees, as well as their mandate, powers, term, composition and the criteria for nomination.

In case of cross-cutting issues between two or more departmental committees, the National Assembly may provide for joint sittings for that particular purpose and upon completion of the exercise, the joint sittings are abolished.

Categories of committees

The following are the categories of committees established in the National Assembly:

- a) Departmental Committees
- b) Audit and Appropriations Committees

- c) House Keeping Committees
- d) Other Select Committees (Delegated Legislation, Implementation, etc)
- e) Ad Hoc Committees
- f) Mediation Committees
- g) Joint Committees

NB: Please refer to Annex I for the complete list of Committees of the National Assembly

In establishing committees, the general arrangements include:

- a) Some committees are sessional, which means they serve for only one year, and include the Committee of Parliamentary Powers and Privileges, the House Business Committee, Members Services and Facilities.
- b) The chairperson of committees such as the Public Accounts Committee and the Public Investments Committee has to be a member of the party not forming the national government.
- c) Some committees are chaired by the Speaker, including the House Business Committee, Committee on Privileges, the Procedure and House Rules Committee, and the Committee on Appointments.

The criteria for nomination includes the following considerations:

- a) relative proportion of parliamentary political parties in the House
- b) gender balance
- c) regional balance
- d) barring of Committee Chairpersons from being members of any other committee
- e) barring of members of the Parliamentary Service Commission from chairing any committee
- f) inclusion of Independent Members in committees
- g) no two members of the House Business Committee may serve in the same committee

The size of select committees is specified in the Standing Orders or in the specific legislation that authorizes their establishment, for example, the National Government Constituencies Development Fund (NG-CDF) Committee and the Committee of Powers and Privileges.

Attendance in select committee meetings

All select committee meetings are open to the public and the Media/ the Press except in circumstances where the Speaker guides otherwise. The following guidelines are applicable in committee meetings:

- (a) Meetings of select committees are generally open to members of the committee, the committee secretariat, invited witnesses, members of the public and the Press.
- (b) Members who are interested in a matter under consideration by committees to which they are not members may request, in writing and at least twenty-four hours before the meeting, to attend the committee meetings through committee chairpersons, ask questions and contribute to deliberations but may not vote (in line with Standing Order 195).
- (c) Members of the public are at liberty to attend meetings of select committees.

Formation of sub-committees

Committees may appoint sub-committees and refer to such sub-committee matters which the committee is empowered to consider. Sub-committees have the same powers as their parent committees but cannot report directly to the House. They report their findings to the main committee for adoption and reporting to the House. Sub-committees increase the flexibility of committees and enable them to pursue several tasks simultaneously. Membership of subcommittees is five members.

Quorum in committees

The quorum required for commencement of meetings of main select committees as well as the sub-committees is specified in the Standing Orders. The quorum in select committees is five members whilst that of sub-committees is three members.

If quorum is not realized within thirty minutes of the time appointed for a meeting of a select committee, the meeting is forthwith adjourned.

III) Roles of Committees

1. Committees and Legislation.

- a) Article 95(3) of the Constitution mandates the National Assembly to enact legislation. Committees assist the House in the in-depth consideration of Bills and legislative proposals by incorporating public or stakeholder participation in the legislative process as well as consider and make recommendations including proposed amendments.
- b) Treaties, protocols and conventions emanating from international agreements are also considered by relevant committees.
- c) In addition, the Committee on Delegated Legislation considers subsidiary/ delegated legislation in form of Regulations, Rules, Guidelines and related legislation.

2. Committees and Representation.

Article 95(2) of the Constitution mandates the National Assembly to deliberate on and resolve issues of concern to the people. Similarly, Article 153(4)(b) requires Cabinet Secretaries to provide Parliament with comprehensive and regular reports concerning matters under their control. Subsequently, committees ascertain that the work carried out by the Executive is in public interest and ensures that they present to the Executive the wishes and priorities of the people. Further, committees cause the Executive, Constitutional Commissions, and Independent Offices to respond to Parliamentary Questions, Statements and Public Petitions submitted on behalf of the people.

3. Committees and Financial Oversight:

In a bid to guarantee prudent use of public resources as well as value for money, committees undertake financial oversight in the following ways:-

- (i) Review of the National Government Budget and related processes such as the consideration of the Budget Policy Statement (BPS), Budget Estimates, Supplementary Budget Estimates, and the Medium Term Expenditure Framework (MTEF).
- (ii) Consideration of financial legislation including the Appropriations Bill, Supplementary Appropriations Bill, Finance Bill, Division of Revenue Bill, County Allocation of Revenue Bill and the Consolidated Fund Bill.
- (iii)Undertaking budget implementation oversight based on the approved budget, regular reports of the Controller of Budget on implementation of the budget of the national government, and through project inspection visits.

4. Committees and Administrative Oversight:

In fulfilment of this mandate committees undertakes the following-

- i) Vetting of nominees for appointment to state and public offices including Cabinet Secretaries, Principal Secretaries, Ambassadors and High Commissioners, Boards of state corporations, Constitutional Commissioners, among others,
- ii) Consideration of petitions for the removal of state and public officers.

CATEGORIES OF COMMITTEES

The National Assembly has developed different types of committees to perform different functions. The categorization of committees varies in each parliamentary jurisdiction.

(a) Departmental Committees

- i. They are appointed at the beginning of each Parliament under the National Assembly Standing Orders and work until the end of a term of Parliament.
- ii. The mandate of Departmental Committees generally mirror the structure and mandate of the National Government.
- iii. Departmental Committees can also investigate matters of public interest that are not necessarily linked to the National Government.
- iv. Departmental committees consider and review legislation.
- v. They investigate and inquire into matters relating to the mandate, management, operations, administration, programs and policies of line ministries.

(b) Audit and Appropriations Committees

There are four audit and appropriations committees in the National Assembly, namely the Public Accounts Committee, the Public Investments Committee, the Special Funds Accounts Committee and the Budget and Appropriations Committee.

Audit committees are responsible for the examination of accounts showing the sums appropriated by the House to meet public expenditure, public investment, various funds established, as audited by the Auditor-General; and control and monitoring of national budget policies and programmes.

(c) Ad Hoc Committees

Ad hoc committees are established for a specific purpose and task that needs to be executed within a defined time frame.

They usually do not draft legislation. Examples of ad hoc committees include: the Ad Hoc S Committee to Investigate the Death of Hon. J. M. Kariuki; Ad Hoc Committee Investigating the Death of the Late Dr. Robert Ouko; Ad Hoc Committee to Investigate the Death of Hon. Tony Ndilinge, Ad Hoc Committee on Khat (Miraa), Ad Hoc Committee Investigating the Decline of the Shilling,; among others.

They are established by a resolution of the House with specific terms of reference and dissolved when the task is complete.

(d) House Management Committees/ House Administration Committees/ Internal Affairs Committees/ House-Keeping Committees/ House Operations Committee

This category of committees deals with internal matters of the National Assembly which include operations, procedures, privileges, provision of welfare and facilities in Parliament, among others. also Mof Parliament

The committees in this category are the House Business Committee, the Committee on Privileges, Committee on Appointments, Committee on Selection, Procedure and House Rules Committee, Liaison Committee, and the Committee on Members Services and Facilities.

(e) Other Select Committees

These include the Committee on Delegated Legislation,

(f) Joint Committees

A joint committee is a committee comprising of members drawn from the National Assembly and the Senate. The National Assembly may pass a resolution and seek the concurrence of the Senate in establishing joint committees. Generally, each House nominates equal number of members to the joint committee.

Joint committees may be established to handle cross-cutting matters that require to be considered by both Houses.

The mandate, powers and proceedings of joint committees are determined by resolutions of both Houses.

In addition, select committees of the National Assembly may hold joint sittings with counterpart committees of the Senate.

(g) Mediation Committees

They are established when either House of Parliament does not agree to whole or part of a Bill that requires consideration of the two Houses or when a House rejects a motion for the second or third reading of a Bill originating from the other House.

A mediation committee is established to reconcile different versions of the same Bill. Each House Speaker appoints equal number of members to the mediation committee.

Quorum consists of a third of the members from each House. The chairperson and vicechairperson are appointed by members but both will not be members from the same House. A mediation committee ceases to exist once it reports the mediated version of a Bill.
