On whether there is a conflict between the provisions of Article 245(4)(c) and Article 246 (3)(a) of the Constitution

On who currently performs the role of recruitment of police officers

65. The nominee's response was that the role of recruitment was currently being carried out by the Inspector General of Police. He explained that if appointed as a Member of the Commission, he will advocate for promotion of police officers in line with existing career progression guidelines. 68. He added that the practice of unmerited promotions needed to be addressed based through consideration of performance and experience.

On Graduate Police Officers

69. He informed the Committee that graduate officers should be placed in their respective areas of expertise, and should join the service at a higher rank. He however added that a proper policy needs to be put in place to ensure experience and long service are also given weight as parameters for promotion of officers.

Vetting for Senior Officers on integrity

70. The nominee suggested that vetting of senior police officers should be a continuous process and not be a one-off event. This would help restore public trust in the service and help transform the service into a professional and accountable security agency that Kenyans would trust with their safety and security.

On Transferring Police to Hardship Areas as a Disciplinary Action

80. The nominee noted that transferring of officers on disciplinary grounds is a disservice to the station the officer is transferred to, in his opinion an officer on disciplinary case should stay closer to the supervisor for guidance and mentorship.

Special Units to respond to emergencies

81. The nominee responded that before special units are deployed to deal with emergencies, a proper analysis of their requirements in the field should be undertaken and that officers should be adequately facilitated while in the field.

On Transfer of Service

82. The nominee responded that the police should be allowed to transfer to the other government departments with their full benefits of service. He added that in order for the government not to lose, there was need for a caveat for a minimum period of years

On the National Police Reservists

83. The nominee submitted that there is no clear policy that exists to guide on the deployment and remuneration of National Police Reservists. On Role of National Police Service Commission

The nominee submitted that the role of the National Police Service Commission is to recruit, and deal with the issues of promotions.

On whether there is a conflict between the provisions of Article 245(4)(c) and Article 246 (3)(a) of the Constitution

The nominee informed the Committee that the role of recruitment of police officers lies with the National Police Service Commission. According to him, the mandate of the Commission is well-defined as far as carrying out promotions and appointments. The nominee stated that the National Police Service Commission could delegate some of its functions to the National Police Service through the Inspector General as provided for in the National Police Service Commission Act. He however noted that the Act makes a distinction between functions that may be delegated and those that cannot be delegated. He added that there is a grey area in the shared mandate of the two bodies that needs to be clarified through law.

He added that due to the close interlinkage between the two institutions there is need for a harmonious working relationship to ensure that their respective mandates are achieved.

On who currently performs the role of recruitment of police officers

The nominee's response was that the role of recruitment was currently being carried out by the Inspector General of Police. He maintained that some responsibilities of the Commission could be delegated to the Inspector-General and noted that the current practice of the recruitment being carried out by the Inspector General may have been as a result of a delegation.

On the implication of the Inspector General of Police being a member of the Commission

It was the nominee's view that the inclusion of the Inspector General of Police and the two Deputy Inspectors-General was because they are directly involved in the daily running and command of the National Police Service. He also noted the importance of including other members who are not in active service. This ensures that police officers' human resource matters are articulated and addressed well at the Commission.

On Stagnation in Police

The nominee acknowledged stagnation of police officers in one rank for long is common and leads to low morale. He explained that if appointed as a Member of the Commission, he will advocate for promotion of police officers when they are due for promotion in line with existing career progression guidelines. He suggested that promotions should be fair and should take into account period of service and work performance as opposed to favoritism.

He added that noted that the practice of unmerited promotions needed to be addressed based on performance and experience.

On Graduate Police Officers

He informed the committee that the graduates should be placed in their area of expertise, and should join in a higher rank. He however added that a proper policy needs to be put in place to experience and long service are also given weight as parameters for promotion of officers.

Vetting for Senior Officers on integrity

The nominee suggested that vetting of senior police officers should be a continuous process and not be a one-off event. This would help restore public trust in the service and help transform the service into a professional and accountable security agency that Kenyans would trust with their safety and security.

On Transferring Police to Hardship Areas as a Disciplinary Action

The nominee noted that transferring of officers with disciplinary issue is a disservice to the station the officer is transferred to, and that according to his opinion an officer on disciplinary case should stay closer to the supervisor for guidance and mentorship.

Special Units to respond to emergencies

The nominee responded that before special units are deployed to deal with emergencies, a proper analysis of their requirement in the field should be undertaken to establish the requirements of the officers while in the field. Basic requirements should be availed.

On Police Transfers

The nominee informed the committee that there is a provision of three years, that needs to be fully implemented

On Transfer of Service

The nominee alluded that the police should be allowed to transfer to the other government agency with the benefits. He added that in order for the government not to lose, there was need for a caveat for a minimum period of years
